

The Space Opera of the Ether Ship

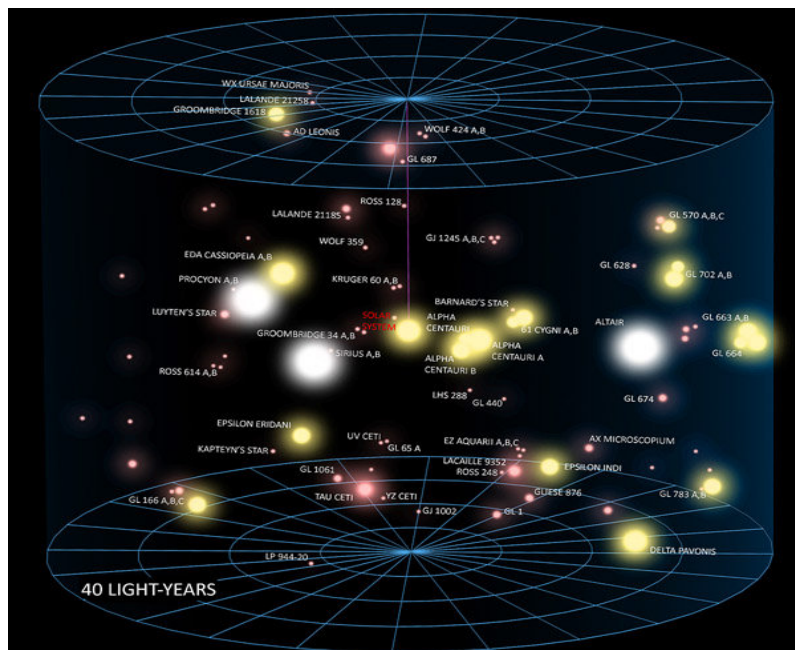

The Ethereal Ring of Captain Van Flight

Crafted from a distant planet across the universe was a ring which controlled a guidance system to navigate throughout the universe. Embedded within the ring's center was a star coordinate system calibrated to elicit a specific tone which would guide the Ether Ship to any point in the galaxy and beyond.

A map of all the galaxies was stored in the rings center and by changing frequencies new coordinate systems would appear on the Ether Ship's viewing portal and more exact frequency calibrations would allow the Ether Ship to travel to its destination.

The Ether Ship was heading back to its home planet to analyze why it could not escape the black hole. This was an emergency flight because if there was a flaw in the navigation system then other star ships could be lost to these increased magnetic fields detected at the enter of the Milky Way galaxy.

The Etherean's home planet was outside the Milky Way galaxy across the deepest reaches of the universe. Its own planet had a very strong magnetic field allowing the Ethereans to build a civilization just by controlling the magnetic fields. Every aspect of its material world was held together by a magnetic field even the beings that lived on it. This is why it was now so important for Captain Van Flight to return to his planet and find out why his ship could not counter the strong forces which forced him into a black hole. It was suspected that there was another force which had not been accounted for and which was not included in its tonal star navigation guidance system. The Ether Ship's tonal navigation system did not have a frequency that would enable it to travel in this strong magnetic field inside of the black hole. This was a serious situation for it would cause a major disruption of its entire civilization if that magnetic field came close to its own planet. Now a new tonal calibration had to be found and an update on its guidance system had to be made. But what would the new frequency sound like? A serious quest for the unknown sound that would enable the Etherean's Ether Ships to navigate in the universe was underway.

Van Flight was occupied with all the ships controls worried it would encounter another force field which would take it off course as it headed back to its own civilization.